The Urban Council (香港市政局) was first established as the Sanitary Board (香港潔淨局) in 1883 in the British Crown Colony Hong Kong. In 1887, a system of partial elections was established, allowing selected individuals to vote for members of the Board. On 1 March 1935, the Sanitary Board was reconstituted to carry out the work which remained much the same until the Pacific War broke out in 1941. The Board was renamed the Urban Council in 1936 when the government passed the 《Urban Council Ordinance Cap.101》, which gave legal motive to the already expanding range of services provided by the Council.

After the Second World War (including the Pacific War theatre) ended in 1945, the Council returned to its pre-war form but without any elected members. The work of the Sanitary Department (潔淨署) of the government began to separate out from the Medical and Health Service. On 28 May 1946, the Council met for the first time after the Imperial Japan's occupation (1941-1945) of the colonial Hong Kong. It was given power to carry out all its old duties---cleaning, burying the dead, running bath houses and public lavatories, hawker control---as well as some new ones, such as the use of bathing beaches throughout Hong Kong.

Only in May 1952 did elections return to the Urban Council. Two members were elected. Later in 1952, the number of elected members was doubled, their terms of office extended to two years, and the franchise enlarged.

By April 1956 half of the members of the Urban Council were elected, but by a minority of the population. A voter had to be at least 21 years of age, to have lived in Hong Kong for at least three years and to be qualified in at least one of 23 categories, which included educational qualifications (School Certificate Examination or equivalent), be a juror, salaried taxpayer, or a member of certain professional organizations. More details can be found in Schedule 1 of the 《Urban Council Ordinance, Cap. 101》. It was estimated that in 1970 there were 250,000 eligible voters and in 1981 the number had increased to 400,000 – 500,000.

In the 1960s, the duties of the Urban Council continued to multiply. The modern or the “second generation” City Hall (香港大會堂) in Central was opened in 1962, followed by the first multi-storey market in Jardine’s Bazaar (渣甸街), Causeway Bay (銅鑼灣), in March 1963.

In 1973, the Council was re-organized under non-government control. It was given financial autonomy, which meant the budget could be planned without the approval of the Legislative Council (香港立法局). It was also no longer primarily in charge of housing. From then onwards, there were no government officials on the Council and both the chairman and vice-chairman were elected among the 24 members. At the time, the Council was unique in consisting solely of members of the public.

In the 1960s, the Council proposed that its jurisdiction should be expanded to encompass the entire Colony, but this was not accepted. The Urban Services Department (USD) (市政事務署) already provided services in the New Territories (新界區) despite the Council not having jurisdiction there. In 1979, the New Territories Services Department (新界市政署) was created (within the Urban Services Department) as a dedicated unit to take up these responsibilities.

In 1986, Regional Council (區域市政局) was set up to serve the New Territories (excluding New Kowloon), analogous to the Urban Council. The New Territories Services Department, separated from the USD, was re-organized to form the Regional Services Department (區域市政事務署) as the executive arm of the Regional Council.

In 1994, the Council became fully elected based on universal and equal adult suffrage.

After the transfer of sovereignty on 1 July 1997, the Council’s name was changed to Provisional Urban Council, consisting of members of the pre-handover Council, and new members were appointed by the Chief Executive of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (香港特別行政區行政長官). The Hong Kong SAR Government then announced that the councils would be abolished in 1999. The Urban Council was dissolved on 31 December 1999 as planned. Within days of the dissolution of the Council, its distinctive symbol was systematically removed from public sight.

Duties and services

The Urban Council provided many services to the Hong Kong people over the years. The Urban Services Department was the executive branch of the Council to implement policies and services. In 1997, it had about 16,000 employees, according to its published leaflet of 《Service Promises》. The Council’s services included: recreational venues and activities, libraries, museums, cultural and entertainment venues, ticketing, wet markets, hawker registration and control, cremation, street cleansing, issuing licenses, and operating abattoirs. The Council also held the authority of the Liquor Licensing Board (酒牌局).

Arts and culture

The Urban Council played a significant role in the artistic and cultural development of Hong Kong. It also managed the Urban Council Public Libraries system in Hong Kong Island and Kowloon which, upon the dissolution of the municipal councils, was merged with the Regional Council Public Libraries to form Hong Kong Public Libraries.

Cultural events

The Council held the Festival of Asian Arts (亞洲藝術節) every year since 1976. The Council also sponsored the Hong Kong International Film Festival (香港國際電影節), which took place annually mid-year and which gave Hong Kong people a rare chance to see a range of international film making, as well as Chinese films. The Independent Short Film and Video Awards were founded in 1993.

Museums

The Hong Kong Museum of Art (香港藝術館) regularly exhibits Chinese and Western art and frequently arranges art exchanges with overseas countries. The Hong Kong Museum of History (香港歷史博物館), once housed in Kowloon Park (九龍公園), records local history and oral tradition. It is now located at Chatham Road (漆咸道) in Tsim Sha Tsui (尖沙咀). The Hong Kong Space Museum (香港太空館) presents shows in the Space Theatre and exhibitions on astronomy, nature and space exploration with IMAX techniques.

Arts groups

The Council directly financed and often even managed many local arts groups. In 1983, at “An Evening With the Council’s Performing Companies”---one of the events in the Urban Council Centenary Celebration---the then-council chairman Hilton Cheong-Leen (張有興) said, “Together with the Government, the Urban Council is committed to the development of the arts in Hong Kong. We aim to do so at the professional level so that gifted Hong Kong citizens can develop their artistic potential. We also aim to make available to all members of the community a wide range of artistic performance for their enjoyment and appreciation. And in the not too distant future we hope to see Hong Kong recognized as a major international centre of the performing arts.”

The Hong Kong Chinese Orchestra (香港中樂團) was established in 1977, under direct financial support and management by the Urban Council.

The Hong Kong Repertory Theatre (香港話劇團) was also founded in 1977 and was directly financed and administered by the Urban Council. It aims to promote and raise the standards of the theatrical “stage play” drama in Cantonese in the territory with professional actors, directors, playwrights, administration, training and production.

The Hong Kong Dance Company (香港舞蹈團) was established in May 1981, and was at one time directly administered by the Urban Council. It aims to combine classical and folk traditions of China with contemporary international awareness. These groups were later taken over by the Leisure and Cultural Services Department (康樂及文化事務署) when the Urban Council was dissolved. In 2001, the groups were privatized and became limited companies, but still receive funding from the government.

Recreation and sport

The Council operated sports grounds, parks, indoor games halls, and public swimming pools.

Sanitation

The Council was responsible for street cleansing, refuse collection, and pest control. It operated refuse collection points, public toilets and bathhouses, and was responsible for rubbish bins throughout the urban area. It was also responsible for the control of hawkers, issuing hawker licenses and operating hawker bazaars.

The Regional Council (區域市政局) was a municipal council in Hong Kong responsible for municipal services in the New Territories (excluding New Kowloon). Its services were provided by the Regional Services Department, the executive arm of the Regional Council. Its headquarters were located near Sha Tin Railway Station (沙田鐵路站).

Technically, only Hong Kong Island, Kowloon, and New Kowloon were within the purview of the Urban Council. But the Urban Services Department, the executive arm of the Urban Council, began servicing the New Territories with its establishment in 1953.

Following public consultation, a Provisional Regional Council was established on 1 April 1985 under the auspices of the colonial Hong Kong Government, to provide for the New Territories what the Urban Council did for Hong Kong Island, Kowloon and New Kowloon. Like the Urban Council, the Regional Council was created in 1986 as an elected body comprising representatives from constituencies and district boards.

In 1986, planning began for the Council's headquarters building. Until permanent premises were built, departments of the Regional Council were scattered around various buildings in Tsim Sha Tsui. A site was selected near Sha Tin Town Centre and construction began in April 1989. It was opened on 27 September 1991 by Hong Kong Governor Sir David Wilson (香港總督衛奕信爵士) and Lady Wilson. The building consisted of a low block, housing the council chambers, alongside a 20-storey tower home to the various units of the Regional Services Department. The building was designed by Peter Keeping, a senior architect of the Architectural Services Department (建築署), and cost HK$200 million. The entrance is guarded by two marble lions made in Beijing (北京). Today the building is the headquarters of the Leisure and Cultural Services Department.

After the transfer of sovereignty on 1 July 1997, the name was once again changed to Provisional Regional Council, consisting of members of the pre-handover Council, and new members appointed by the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region Chief Executive Tung Chee-Hwa (香港特別行政區行政長官董建華). The Council was dissolved on 31 December 1999 together with the Provisional Urban Council under the then-Chief Executive's plan to streamline and centralize municipal services as part of his government policy reforms. The functions of the two councils were replaced by two newly established government departments, the Food and Environmental Hygiene Department (食物環境衛生署) and the Leisure and Cultural Services Department (康樂及文化事務署).

The archives of the two municipal councils are held by the Hong Kong Public Libraries, and are available online in digitized form.
